One of the leaders of the men was seen this morning and said there was no danger of the sympathy growing so strong as to cause the men to strike unless the Company entered into another contract with the Pullman people for more cars.

A few days ago Geil called a meeting of the Chib, and it was decided to hold the obsequies July 5, which is next. Thursday. A limited number of invitations were sent out—not more than two dozen in all.

The party will assemble at Clifton, S. L. at 9 o'clock in the morning. A tug will be in waiting, and from that point the pleturesque passing of Jaeger will begin. There will be lunch, and whenever the sod sea waves fail of a proper requiem suitable music will be offered by the mourners in the old German drinking songs the dead man loved and sang.

A reporter for "The Evening World" called upon Mr. Geil this morning and saw what there is left of Jaeger. At Gell's command a waiter hustled the dishes off the dumbwaiter and brought down by that useful avenue the remains of poor Jaeger. All that is left of a once robust man is four pounds of white bone dust that harely first a black-painted quart cannister. Geil says that he is going to cut off the tops of the can, put a glass in it sind let the curious see it after Monday next. He says that he dare not leave the box open to the public, as every other fellow wants to have a pinch of the ashes, and there would be left nothing for a funeral if the can were not guarded.
